Thinking about law school? The Duke Law D.C. Summer Institute on Law and Policy is a great way to try it out and a chance to learn from premier Duke Law faculty — without ever leaving Washington.

Course offerings in the 2018 Duke Law D.C. Summer Institute on Law and Policy focus on topics important to current and aspiring practitioners in fields that require mastery of constitutional, statutory, and regulatory law and policymaking. The two sessions this summer are July 9-19, 2018, and July 23-August 2, 2018. Each course is designed to provide an accessible introduction to the pertinent legal and policy subject matter. Those living and working in Washington who are potentially interested in attending law school, or who otherwise seek greater familiarity with the legal framework in a particular field, are especially encouraged to enroll.

Registration is now open.

In each two-week session, classes will be held Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday evenings from either 5:45-7:15 p.m. or 7:30-9:00 p.m., at the Washington office of premier law firm Jones Day, located in the historic Acacia Building at 51 Louisiana Ave. NW, close to Metro's Red Line. Wednesday evenings are reserved for special programs, including a public conversation between U.S. Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Professor Neil Siegel that will take place on Wednesday, August 1. Participants in either or both sessions are invited to attend all of the special events.

Please share this announcement with undergraduates and recent graduates interested in law school and/or interning in Washington for the summer, and friends or colleagues who might be interested in our program.

For additional information, please contact us.
