

The Center for Child Welfare Presents:
Substance Abuse: The When, The What, The Why

A Workshop by Natalie Baerwaldt

The negative developmental impacts of early substance abuse affects individuals throughout their lives. Substance abuse is a family disease and becomes a cycle of addiction if appropriate interventions of support are not provided. This workshop will examine the developmental impacts and the reasons why people use drugs in the first place. A discussion about the effects of substance abuse on children of addicts will highlight the need for appropriate, early intervention for families. The audience will leave with an understanding of the when, why and what drugs parents use, and know how to support families and children in cases when substance abuse treatment and prevention are identified.
